		SOUTH AFRICA: Military Exercise
25X1		//Extensive South African Air Force and air- borne activity during the past two weeks appears to be part of a large-scale military exercise to test and improve the country's ability to carry out paradrop operations. There is no indication that South Africa has immediate plans to send a large number of troops outside the country. It may be pre- paring for the contingency of increased guerrilla activity in Namibia. For the longer term, the South Africans may have decided that now is the time to increase their preparations for the guerrilla threats to their own territory that they expect from several directions in the future.//
25X1		//Earlier this month, some 5,000 reservists, including members of the two reserve parachute battalions, were called to active duty. The scale and unusual nature of the callup initially suggested that South Africa might be planning a strike against guerrilla bases in southern Angola near the Namibian border.	25X 25X
25X1	25X1 DIA	some 480 paratroopers took part last week in a two-day exercise that the source called "completely unsuccessful." A second paradrop exercise, probably involving units of all three of the Army's regular and reserve parachute battalions, took place last weekend. In addition, helicopter and light bomber units of the Air Force have been exercising frequently and training for night operations.//
25X1		//Namibia is the most immediate cause of military concern in South Africa. South Africa is concerned about a possible increase in guerrilla activity in the months ahead, especially if Prime Minister Vorster decides to hold a preindependence election without a truce with the South-West Africa People's Organization or without UN participation in the election process.//

25X1	//The South Africans also believe they will eventually have to fend off attacks by South African guerrillas based in Mozambique in a SWAPO-controlled Namibia, or even in a black-ruled Zimbabwe.//
25X1	//To prepare for these contingencies clearly will require time, and South Africa appears to be taking steps to strengthen its airmobile strike capability. This, along with measures under way to develop a domestic arms industry and to strengthen other branches of the military, would be designed eventually to improve substantially the country's military capabilities.	25X1
:	ZAIRE-ANGOLA: Cross-Border Pursuit
25X1	Zairian President Mobutu confirmed to the US Ambas- sador that Zairian troops crossed the border into Angola last week in hot pursuit of "Katangan" insurgents.
25X1	The Zairian forces briefly occupied the Angolan town of Caianda following tactical air bombardments, but later with-drew into Zaire after reportedly driving the anti-Mobutu forces from their headquarters.
25X1	Mobutu told the Ambassador that he believes the insurgents were acting with the blessings of the Angolan Government. These hostilities will worsen the already dim prospects for progress in the next round of normalization talks between
